Dance 'Cutting' Forbidden By Rules of Etiquette

"This letter is written from a camp out in Pennsylvania," writes Geraldine, "and we are anxiously awaiting an answer. Of course, we have dances and many other forms of amusement out here, and be it said for your further information that we also have some heated disputes regarding the alleged etiquette of some of the young women. Please answer these questions:-

100 Per Cent. Service

Well, here's making good your boast, by answering your questions before the middle of August. Of course the GRAPHIC Service League will do all it can for its members, wherever they may be located. You may stand behind that assertion a full 100 per cent.

It is an enpardonable breach of etiquette to "cut" a dance unless valid excuse can be offered There absolutely is no apology for a young woman who is found danc-ing with some one else when her rightful partner comes to claim a number; while to lurk in some unseen corner allowing the young man to whom she has promised the dance to seek everywhere for her is evidence of the worst form of ill-breeding. If the lady de-sires to excuse herself, she should express regret and ask politely to be released. Should her partner not readily acquiesce to this, however, she has no alternative, short of rudeness, except to sit out the dance with him and be as agreeable as possible.

Can Refuse Dance

Any young woman may refuse a make a wish and dance with perfect grace. It is necessary only for her to say that program is full or that she prefers to rest.

The escort is at liberty to claim the first dance with his companion and as many more as she cares to concede. She should not monopolize him for all of the dances, how

Letters of Introduction

Mrs. G.: Never write a letter of introduction to a friend unless you feel certain that it will be welcomed and that the party to whom it is sent will be glad to entertain the recipient of your letter. The party to whom a letter of intro duction is presented should feel an obligation to entertain the party presenting the letter and should extend this courtesy graciously.

Daddy Dusk The Sandman:

"What are you looking at? asked Doodle when he came near Daddy Dusk, who was peering up at the sky.

"I see the name of a little boy up there just beyond that cloud. It is John Agnew, and he lives at Arverne, L. I. It is painted in the sky that he wants to go to the Land of Silver Bells."

"Take him, then," replied Doodle. Skimming along the coast of the ocean, Daddy Dusk was soon at John's house, where the boy was waiting for him.

"Hurry up!" shouted Daddy
Dusk as John hopped into the car.
Away they flew to the Land of Silver Bells. High up on one of mountains John could fairies, elves and midgets ringing bells as though their lives depended on it. By and by the Queen of Silver Bells flew down beside Daddy Dusk and John.

"I have a set of bells for you. They are what you call Silver Chimes. All you have to do is to make a wish and they chime what-ever tune you wish. Make a wish

John was silent for a time and then said, "I have made a wish." Just at that moment John sat up straight and looked about him. What he hear! was the alarm clock in his own room!
